COE Staff Participate in 26th Greater Atlanta Race for the Cure in Support of Breast Cancer Awareness

ATLANTA, GA — [October 19, 2026] — Council on Occupational Education (COE) staff members, accompanied by several family members and friends, joined survivors, families, and supporters at the 26th Greater Atlanta Race for the Cure on Saturday, October 17, 2026, at Lenox Square Mall in Atlanta, Georgia. Hosted by Susan G. Komen, the annual event brought the community together to raise awareness, honor those impacted by breast cancer, and support ongoing efforts to end the disease.

Braving Atlanta's hills and crisp fall temperatures, COE staff participated in the 5K alongside hundreds of community members united by a shared commitment to making a difference. The event provided an opportunity for staff to connect outside the workplace while supporting a cause that affects individuals and families across the nation.

For COE, participation in the Race for the Cure reflected the organization's commitment to community engagement, service, and collective action. Staff members came together in a show of solidarity, recognizing the importance of supporting those affected by breast cancer and contributing to initiatives that promote awareness and hope.

"It was great to see the staff come together for such a worthy cause. Our participation demonstrated our commitment to supporting others. A big thank you to our staff members, Corri Bradley and Susie Hill for leading the way!" said Dr. Susan Wright, COE Chief of Staff.

Corri Bradley, COE Human Resources/Accounting Project Manager, helped coordinate staff participation in the event and emphasized the importance of coming together for a cause that extends beyond the workplace.

"Participating in the Race for the Cure was a meaningful opportunity for our team to come together in support of a cause that touches so many lives," said Bradley. "Every step was a reminder of the strength of those facing breast cancer, the importance of standing alongside survivors and their families, and the impact we can make when we show up for one another."

The event served as a reminder that meaningful contributions extend beyond professional responsibilities. Through their participation, COE staff demonstrated the value of teamwork, compassion, and community involvement while supporting Susan G. Komen's mission to create a world without breast cancer.
